The day of the tragedy a hunt was in progress at Meyerling. Among the guests was Prince Auersperg. The latter had a beautiful sister whom the crown prince sometime prerious had succeeded in getting into his meshes, and when this fact was revealed to the family of Auersperg, which is one of the most powerful and influential in Austra, the prince vowed vengeance and the opportunity came on the day of the hunt. The tunity came on the day of the hunt. The crown prince and Prince Auersperg were in hot pursuit of game when a shot rang through the air and the crown prince fell to the ground. A new clerk had been appointed, however, and the license business had been resumed at the old stand.

This business of matrimony in Jeffersonville is carried on on strictly business principles. From 1,500 to 2,000 eloping couples go there to be made one every year, and very few of them are disappointed. The Indiana law is elastic. It requires that the girl must be eighteen years of age before the license can be granted, but this does not prevent many mere children from getting the desired document. Few questions are asked, and it is easy enough to pick up a friend with an elastic conscience, who will swear that the maiden is of age. In fact, more than one inhabitant of this Gretna Green makes a living by swearing (for a consideration) to the age of Reading at Public Libraries. rom the St. James Gazette. In Paris, as well as with us, it is found that the value of public free libraries as a means of educating the masses is small. An attempt was nade to induce people who frequent the sixtyfour free libraries in Paris to prefer instructive books to works of fiction, but the only result of this was a decrease in the number of readers. So the endeavor was abandoned, the authorities coming to the conclusion that it is better the public should read novels than not read at all. At present nearly 50 per cent of the books taken out are novels. Both in London and Paris we may as well accept the inevitable. The free library is not a place where the ardent student learns the latest lessons of science or

The reader, if of the male sex, goes to search the scriptures of the sporting prophets; if a woman, to read the fashion papers and the fiction of the day. The books best worth reading are unread.

The New England Hired Man.

From the Boston Journal.

The "hired man" on a New England farm coccupies a unique position and in many ways is a privileged character. As a usual thing he is regarded, not as a servant, but almost as a member of the household. There are New England farmers worth their hundreds of thousands of dollars who never sit down to a meal that they do not have their field hands at their elbow. In the ordinary household intercourse the workmen of the farm are treated not as mentals, not as inferiors, but almost, if not quite, as equals. They are on terms of comradeship with the other members of the household, young and old, and they have their recognized place in ordinary family gatherings. This relation of the muployer to the employer is a phenomenon that is to be found in New England outy, or at least in the northern states of America, where New England customs largely mold the labits of the agricultural population. This intimate relation of master and man originated in conditions which no longer exist. In the old days, when the farmer's when her their considerable man in the southers are not overcome as they are on our Atlantic coast. This intimate relation of master and man originated in conditions which no longor exist. In the old days, when the farmer's "hired man" was his neighbor's son, who lent his aid to help a neighbor through the busy season and often spent the rest of the year teaching school or pursuing his studies in a country academy, such an arrangement was only the natural and proper and indeed the only possible one. But the "hired men" of New England, considering them as a whole, are now a distinct and separate class, usually of unknown and occasionally of sinister antecedents. The old familiar relations of master and man are no longer always desirable or safe. Yet from the London Graphic Physicists-that is to say the physicists who are not idling-are now busy reaping the aftermath of the thunder storms which for a week or more have been the chief meteorological feature of our climate. Lightning of every type-zigzag, with sharply defined borders, without any apparent width, in sheets or in the shape of fireballs-has been seen, and several lives have been lost by these Olympian thunderbolts. But what is most curious is that cattle have been more frequently struck than human beings, even when the chances of both were equal. This has been noticed more than once by students of electricity. Thus, a miller standing between a horse and a mule was only shaken a little, while the animals were killed. There is also the well-known instance of the Abbey of Noirmoutiers near Tours, where a flash of lightning killed twenty-two horses without doing any other harm to the one hundred and fifty monks whom it visited in the refectory than overturning the one hundred and fifty bottles which contained their rations of wine. Again, a case is on record in which seventy-eight sheep and two dogs were portant business may be inferred from the fact | killed, while the woman who guarded them was untouched. It has also been frequently observed that the outer members of a party are struck while the middle ones escape. Thirty-eight horses ranged in a line were only shaken by a stroke, except the two at each end, which were killed, and of five children sitting on a bench only the first and last were fatally

THE VAGARIES OF LIGHTNING. The Queer Pranks Which the Fluid Plays it Its Dendly Plach.

This peculiarity may be due, as Arago sug-gested long ago, to the circumstance that the intermediate bodies simply transmit the charge and are, therefore, least injured, just as the parts of a bar of iron struck by lightning which are most damaged are the points at which the current makes its entrance and exit.

THE TWO COMETS.

One to Occult Some Small Stars Early in Sep-From the Providence Journal. A very beautiful astronomical phenomenor comets of very short period, its period being somewhat less than seven years, the time of last numbers about one hundred and forty-seven millions of miles and from the earth about one hundred and four millions of miles. Any one having access to telescopes will have no trouble whatever in identifying the comet on the two nights of its near approach to the Pleiades. The Pleiades now cross the meridian between 5:30 and 6 in the morning, so that by midnight they are well situated for observation. There is another comet which is now well situated for observations. It is Encke's famous short-period comet, with a period of only three and one-third years—the shortest period of any known comet of the present day. Encke's comet is now visible in the northeast, and is situated about ten degrees south of the bright star Capella, the leading brilliant in the con-stellation Auriga. Encke's comet is one of those comets rarely visible to the naked eye, although on some occasions it has just been detected (as in October and November, 1881) as a faint brush of light shining as a star of the fifth magnitude. In the telescope the comet presents a fairly well-defined nucleus with a hazy envelope, often so thin that the faintest star can easily be seen through it.

One of the most singular facts connected with it is that its veried is shortening.

it is that its period is shortening. From the year 1797 to the year 1875 the period has shortened nearly four days. The only explanation of this shortening of period is that there exists in space a thin medium capable of affording a resistance to bodies of so little density as the small comets and yet not dense enough to apparently offset the motions of the cke's comet at perihelion passes just within the orbit of Moreury and at aphelion passes be-tween Jupiter and the asteroids. The distance of the comet now from the earth and sun is about 114,000,000 miles, and at the time of peri-helion, about the middle of October, will be about 37,000,000 miles.

What Drowns Good Swimmers. From the New York Telegram.

There is a conclusion of practical wisdom presented by a circumstance common to nearly all the drownings of strong swimmers that have occurred in the surf this year. Their bodies have been recovered, if at all, only after long intervals and with the greatest difficulty.

This shows that they have been carried out to sea. That fact means that the tide was then running out. Else their bodies had been rolled ashore almost while they were warm.

This is proof conclusive that these drownings were not due to the cause that has been almost invariably assigned—the undertow. That conclusion is an eminently reasonable one. A good swimmer has nothing to do with what is called the undersow—hardly more than a cork

Some of the efforts put forth have been experimental purely and have not proved successful. For instance, one device was to suspend pans of kerosene under street lights, so that when the moths flew to the lights they would fall into the kerosene and be destroyed. But this was labor in vain, for it turns out that the female gipsy moth does not fly at all, while the males have been so well brought up that—much to the astonishment of the grave professor who records the discovery—they "do not fly later than about 9:30 in the evening," and the professor mournfully adds: "As it is scarcely dark at that time very few, if any, could be destroyed in this way." The professor does not seem to have attempted to undermine the moths' habit of going to bed early, though that method of dealing with the pest may be resorted to later on. Meanwhile it is a satisfaction to know that the commissioners' experts are able to detect a gipsy moth's nest at a distance of forty feet. least five years, during which time the state

Our little white-haired darling
Has left us now to go
With the angels up in heaven,
An pure as the whitest snow.
And there she il dwell in peace,
With music strains so coat,
While angels sing to her sie "il smile,
And be where God is near.
